

The Association for Education & Ageing

Do you...

- Want to understand more about learning and ageing?
- Work with older people as clients?
- Teach and train older learners?
- Manage or teach staff who do?
- Want support for your own learning as an older person?

Then AEA will enable you to:

- Make contact with a variety of other professionals with a common interest
- Make contact with older mature students interested in learning
- Exchange views and experience about learning in later life: gain support and fresh ideas
- Keep informed about academic and research developments in the field of education and ageing
- Participate in national and regional conferences and meetings

AEA promotes later life learning by:

- Listening to the voice of older learners and supporting and promoting their interests
- Highlighting demographic and socio-economic trends and policy developments that affect older people's abilities to lead active and fulfilling lives
- Encouraging the sharing and dissemination of good practice in the broad field of education and ageing
- Exposing theory and practice to critical scrutiny, through conferences and seminars, publications, and production of a quarterly Digest
- Linking with other organisations and individuals, nationally and internationally
- Facilitating networking among people from a wide range of disciplines, services and interests, including many older people themselves

The Association for Education and Ageing is a membership organisation open to all. Its particular strength is combining the interests of research, practice and policy concerning later life learning. Importantly, it involves older learners in dialogue with each other and with the professionals and volunteers who work in the services that provide and support learning.
