

Anne Jamieson
Emeritus Reader, Birkbeck University of London

Anne worked as an academic in gerontology and life course studies for over 25 years before retiring in 2011. Her research was initially focused on European studies of care for older people. Later on, her research interests turned to education and lifelong learning, in particular the meaning of learning in later life. [Example: Jamieson, A. (2007) Education and the Quality of Life in Later Years. Quality in Ageing, 8 (3) September]

Since her retirement she has become a learner herself, expanding her interests into areas such as astronomy, architecture and art history. She is involved in voluntary work in her local community, where she contributes to the teaching of IT skills to older people. She has served on the AEA Executive Committee since 2007.
